

Introduction to Freelancing

What is Freelancing?

Freelancing is working independently by offering services for short-term projects or tasks.

It does not require a long-term contract with an employer.

A freelancer = someone with a skill, providing it to clients for payment.

Group Discussion: Freelancing Pros and Cons

Pros and cons

Main differences between Freelancing and a Full-time job

	Freelancing	Full-time job
Flexibility	You have the freedom to work from anywhere at any time, depending on your preferences or circumstances. And you get to pick your clients and projects.	Having a full-time job means you perform specific duties during set working hours. You also typically have set responsibilities.
Stability	Unlike full-time employment, freelance work can be a bit unpredictable, making it harder to plan for the future.	Full-time workers generally have a stable, predictable income and work schedule, making it easier to plan for future expenses.
Benefits	Independent workers typically don't have access to employer-funded benefits like paid vacation time, retirement plans, health insurance, and sick leave.	Benefits are a significant upside of full-time employment, like paid vacation, health insurance, and retirement plans.
Motivation	As a freelancer, you operate as your own boss, making self-motivation a necessity.	As a full-time employee, you're expected to meet specific performance standards to earn raises or promotions.

Main differences between Freelancing and a Full-time job

Earnings	Freelancers have greater control over their earning potential, as they set their own rates and working hours.	The earnings of a full-time employee are typically determined by their employer's salary structure and policies.
Skill set	Independent contractors have the flexibility to either specialize in a particular industry or gain experience and skills in various subject areas.	Unlike freelancers, full-time employees may not have the same level of flexibility to develop specific skills, as their job roles and responsibilities are largely defined by their employer.
Experience	Freelancers have the opportunity to work with multiple brands around the world to expand their professional network and develop a diverse portfolio.	In contrast to freelancers, employees are generally limited to working with a single company, which may restrict their exposure to different industries or clients.
Responsibilities	Freelancers are responsible for their own administrative tasks, such as managing their schedule, invoicing clients, and tracking expenses.	Employees commonly have essential administrative tasks handled by their employer.

Requirements	Knowledge of local culture and market	Strong communication skills + good English
Competition	Relatively lower	Very high, but with more opportunities
Pricing	Based on local market rates	Flexible, often higher rates available
